Seeing God at Work

Luke 2:15

When the angels had left them and gone into heaven, the shepherds said to one another, "Let us go now to Bethlehem and see this thing that has happened, which the Lord has told us about."

Last month, we reflected on "waiting."

Not 'waiting' as passive delay, but as attentiveness. This is a waiting that refuses despair. A waiting that watches for new life emerging from what appears cut down. The prophet Isaiah gave us that image: a shoot growing from the stump of Jesse - life appearing where nothing seemed possible.

This Christmas Eve, I invite you to move (from waiting) to seeing. The shoot has emerged. The light has entered the world. And now the question before us is this: do we recognize it?

We all approach a new year differently. Some of us try to see by predicting the future - the future of the economy, of the church, of our well-being, of our politics. In doing so, we pray, we set goals, we measure outcomes, we complain, we monitor our efforts. Others try to see by looking backward - examining what worked and what failed, regretting or praising, recalling hopes and disappointments, joys and sorrows. There is no right way to imagine our lives, but in all the ways we approach our Christian lives, God has already placed divine presence among us. The question is not whether God is acting, but whether we recognize where and how that action is taking place. And often, God's work does not arrive in obvious places. It appears quietly - like a candle in a dark room, like a thin line of white against black. Not enough to overwhelm the darkness in our midst, but enough to remind us that darkness does not have the final word.

The shepherds saw what others overlooked. The wise ones followed a sign others ignored.

Joseph saw love where others saw shame. Mary saw nothing of herself except her availability to God's service. Again and again, God chooses to meet us right here - in the ordinary, the fragile, the socially vulnerable places of our lives, and invites us to see.

Can you see God at work? Merry Christmas and Happy New Year!

Grace and peace,

Pastor Emmanuel
